&&   -> If the first command executed successfully then only second command will get executed.

|| -> If the first command fails, then only second command will get executed.

;   -> Executes all commands sequentially, regardless of whether the previous commands succeeded or failed.

| -> output of first command will be passed as an input to another command.